

About the author

Matthew Kuch is a seasoned management consultant and entrepreneur who believes that the best lessons are the ones you live through. He has spent his career navigating the crossroads of public health, data science, and strategic advisory work. The work has taken him across borders and sectors, giving him a front-row seat to the complexities of systems and the importance of finding practical solutions.

When it came to building his own family home in Uganda, he approached the challenge the same way he's approached his career—with a clear vision, meticulous planning, and a willingness to learn from every success and setback. Along the way, he gathered insights not just from his own experience, but also from conversations with friends, family, and colleagues who have walked similar paths. Their stories, combined with his own, form the foundation of this book.

He knows that building a home isn't just about bricks and mortar—it's about making decisions that reflect your values and goals while navigating the constraints of time, money, and resources. Through this book, he hopes to share those lessons in a way that feels less like instruction and more like a conversation, because he believes the best advice is the kind that sparks your own ideas.

Matthew Kuch lives in Wakiso district with his family, where he continues to explore his passions for writing, problem-solving, and helping others turn their plans into reality.